Calvarial Metastasis From Breast Carcinoma

Dr. Evith Milton Pereira, Dr. Manisha Y. Tambekar, Dr. Reenal R. Patel, Dr. Reeta Dhar, Dr. Trupti Shetty
Department of Pathology, MGM Medical College, Navi Mumbai

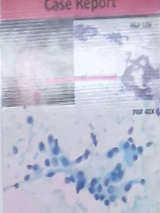

Introduction

- Female breast cancer is one of the major causes of death among women.
- Breast happens to be the most common organ to which the breast cancer metastasizes.
- This case report represents metastasis to the frontal bone from invasive ductal carcinoma.

Case Report

- 50F presented to neurosurgery OPD with complaints of swelling over forehead since 2 months with no constitutional or neurological history.
- On examination, two firm, painless swellings were noted, largest being 4 x 3 cm and smaller 2 x 1 cm in size.
- CT scan revealed large destructive lesion in frontal bone, with intracranial extra-axial extension.
- USG guided FNA of forehead swelling was suggestive of metastatic lesion.

Case Report

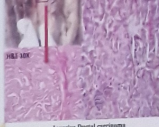

Metastasis-Frontal region

- On backpedaling, clinical examination revealed lump in right breast. FNA showed features of epithelial malignancy.
- Right simple mastectomy specimen showed single, 2x1 cm, grayish-white, firm mass.
- Histopathological features were consistent with invasive ductal carcinoma.

Case Report

Ductal Carcinoma

Invasive Ductal carcinoma

Discussion

- Breast cancer metastasis to the non-bronchus may involve the bone, the dura or the brain parenchyma.
- The development of skull metastasis is generally a late event and grows slowly allowing other complications of the underlying breast cancer to develop.
- Calvarial metastases are mostly asymptomatic or cause local swelling (painless) leading to cosmetic problems.
- This case report represents metastasis to the frontal bone with intracranial extra-axial extension, as far known to occur in about 7% of primary breast cancer patient.

Conclusion

- The metastasis often can become larger for FNAC for quick diagnosis.
- Calvarial metastasis without a known primary needs metastatic work up and prompt diagnosis for choosing appropriate treatment options.
- For early detection of breast cancer an effort should be made to raise awareness through education on symptoms and treatment.
