Nasogastric Intubation Teaching Model

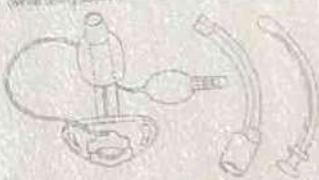

This hands-on, molded model depicts the anatomy of the nose, mouth, pharynx, trachea, esophagus, and stomach. Students can learn and practice the proper technique for inserting advanced feeding tubes or catheters by passing them through the model's nose or mouth. This excellent case teaching aid allows instructors using the model's simulated tracheostomy.

The average distance from the tip of the nasogastric tube to the stomach junction (in the adult) is 42 cm, and most nasogastric tubes are marked at this point. However, this distance can vary with each individual. With most patients, a reliable indicator that the tube has been inserted properly is the rapid return of gastric contents by suction. Most often it is best to measure the tube against the 42 cm mark and then allow withdrawal or while being aspirated to the first suction or aspiration.

Advanced intubation models should be used with caution. Use only with patients who are intubated by the adult team.

To fit, make the length of a nasal cannula used for oxygenation. The tube is a length equal to the distance between the tip of the nose and the umbilicus.

Tracheostomy care is easier and more comfortable. The model tracheostomy, epiglottis, and larynx in addition, intubation, and insertion of tracheostomy tubes.
